<http://lists.oasis-open.org/archives/sca-j/200807/msg00013.html>

Mike E mentions that the OSOA JEE specification is imminently going to be submitted to this TC - and requests that some time is devoted to this specification during the F2F. Agreed.

Mark requests that the discussion of "Plan for next meeting" is brought forward from the end of the meeting in case people have to leave early.

Agreed.

(Item 6) New Issues

None

(Item 7) Existing Issues

JAVA-41:

<http://www.osoa.org/jira/browse/JAVA-41>

Latest email with proposal and discussion:

<http://lists.oasis-open.org/archives/sca-j/200807/msg00017.html>

Dave Booz has a question - is there a need to require a void return type on the lifecycle methods

Mark - advantage of a void return type is that it makes it clear that the runtime will not be influenced by anything that the programmer decides to return

Anish: Agreed. The revised proposal is as given below:

Ref: sca-javacaa-1.1-spec-WD03.doc

Change the text in the given sections and line range as given below:

Section 2.2 - Line 121:

Methods annotated as lifecycle methods MUST be public with no arguments and a void return type.

Section 8.9 - Lines 1184-1186:

The @Destroy annotation is used to denote a Java class method that will be called when the scope defined for the local service implemented by the class ends. The method MUST have a void return type and no arguments. The annotated method MUST be public.

Section 8.12 - Lines 1257-1260:

The @Init annotation is used to denote a Java class method that is called when the scope defined for the local service implemented by the class starts. The method MUST have a void return type and no arguments. The annotated method MUST be public. The annotated method is called after all property and reference injection is complete.

Anish: the above is from Vamsi

Mark Combella: <http://lists.oasis-open.org/archives/sca-j/200807/msg00021.html>

Dave raises a discussion about removing the statements about "void return type"

Anish also raises the question about methods that throw exceptions

Simon thinks that these points probably require more thought and the building of a new proposal

Discussion also about the visibility of these methods - is "public" required

- some sympathy for allowing any visibility

Mark Combella moves to resolve this issue using the above text modified to allow public or protected methods with no arguments and a void return type in all 3 paragraphs
Fails to receive a second

Dave B moves to resolve this issue using the above text modified to allow methods of any access modifier with no arguments and a void return type in all 3 paragraphs
Mike E seconds

Vladimir makes the point that there are annotations defined in JSR 250 which have a meaning close to these annotations

Action 20080710-03: Vladimir to send an email to the list about the relationship of the JSR 250 annotations to Issue 41

Dave B withdraws the motion

Action 20080710-04: Anish to raise an issue to capture the problem relating to @init and @destroy methods throwing exceptions
